FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

St. Louis County Attorney Mark Rubin has been invited to the White House on Nov. 18 to take part in the 10th Anniversary National Prosecution Summit.

The Justice Department said the summit is to build on the President's efforts to strengthen relationships between the community and law enforcement. It will bring together local, state and federal prosecutors "seeking to implement innovative strategies to enhance public trust and confidence in the criminal justice system while promoting public safety."

The Association of Prosecuting Attorneys and the U.S. Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Assistance are sponsoring the summit.

The event will convene at the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives headquarters on Nov. 16, continuing there the next day before moving to the White House on Nov. 18.

The Association of Prosecuting Attorneys is a national organization dedicated to supporting and enhancing the effectiveness of prosecutors in their efforts to create safer communities, ensure justice and uphold public safety.

The summit will cover such national topics as Community Trust, Police Use of Force, Prosecutorial Ethics, Smart Prosecution Initiatives and Innovative Prosecution Strategies for Safer Communities.

"I'm honored to be part of an organization that is recognized as a leader in national policy discussions," Rubin said.
